

Dr Ronx Ikharia

Trans Non Binary Emergency Medicine Doctor

Dr Ronx is an award winning trans non binary emergency medicine doctor by profession.

On screen they are best known for their role as a presenter on CBBC's Operation Ouch. They describe themselves as a queer, black, intersectional feminist.

Driven and determined, they self-funded their way through Medical School after leaving home in their teenage years, graduating from Kings College Medical School in 2011.

Dr Ronx faced a challenging upbringing and realises their unique story can help motivate and inspire young people from all walks of life. Dr Ronx is passionate about community, volunteering and giving back – as demonstrated by them mentoring young people in Hackney; giving presentations in local schools; raising money for various charities; and championing young people to feel empowered to achieve their goals.

Dr Ronx has hosted landmark documentaries answering questions facing the nation, such as Are Women The Fitter Sex? and The Truth About Boosting Your Immune System for BBC One, plus the highly acclaimed Channel 4 investigative documentary Is Covid Racist? as well as taking their medical expertise onto the streets in The Unshockable Dr Ronx for BBC 3.

In 2023 Dr Ronx presented The Bias Diagnosis: Gender Injustice in Healthcare, a podcast series for Audible in which Ronx investigates one of the biggest injustices in modern medicine. They also had their first book published by Harper Collins, Amazing Bodies, as part of the Little Experts series. In July 2024 another installment, the most recent release in the Little Experts series, How to Save a Life! came out, and it was a big hit.

Their motto is: "You cannot be, what you do not see"
